EXCITING OPPORTUNITY!!!

Global Health Equity Scholars (GHES) Fellowship

Welcome! The GHES Fellowship program is offered through a consortium of UC Berkeley, The University of Arizona, Stanford University, and Yale University. It is designed to provide pre- and post-doctoral trainees with exceptional, interdisciplinary education and training in health research designed to improve population health globally. Trainees will be matched with global health faculty from one of the four participating institutions and a select international site, thus engaging in rich and enduring, mentored research experience that will foster scientific and career development in global health research. The GHES Fellowship is designed for: US nationals who are doctoral students (PhD, DrPH, etc.), professional students (MD, DDS, DVM, PharmD, nursing, etc.), and post-doctoral fellows.

This fellowship program of broad scope and is available to disciplines across the university, and is not restricted to only those in the MEZCOPH! Tell your friends. We look forward to receiving your applications!

For detailed eligibility criteria, refer to the GHES Application Guidelines.
